

Fieldwork 3: Adelaide's CBD – an urban field trip within the Terraces

Field trip leaders: Roger Smith and Mellony Tassell

All environments change over time. The most drastic changes can alter environments in irreversible ways. Cities can expand or decline. The internal morphology can be shaped by elements such as economic and social developments, changing lifestyles, and variations in the architecture and use of buildings. Adelaide's CBD (defined for the purposes of the excursion as the area within the four Terraces) has a fascinating mix of commercial, governmental, light industrial, leisure/recreational and residential land use.

This walking field trip will concentrate on the south-east and south-west CBD precincts where the residential and historical imprint is unique in terms of Australia's capital cities, but shorter journeys will take place in the adjacent parklands, the central spine (King William Street) and the northern commercial streets. Participants will have opportunities to map, sketch, record, photograph and be involved in trialled student activities used on field trips to these precincts. A DVD of images and presentations suitable for classroom use will be provide for participants.

Visits to Christies Walk (Sustainable Urban Village) and The Adelaide Central Market are included. Lunch and visits to some of Adelaide's famous watering holes is an essential part of the walk.
